

TERRY HUNT (K68-75)

The following is mainly taken from an article in the Autumn 1996 OF Magazine.

He was born in 1957 and claims to have kept a rather low profile at the College, as a day boy coming in each morning from Cretingham.

After graduating from Reading University he wrote to every suitable newspaper he could find asking for a job. The Editor of the East Anglian Daily Times (EADT), whose chair he would one day occupy, personally telephoned him at Reading and he started at Bury St Edmonds as a junior reporter.

Since then, he has risen steadily through the organisation; running a district office in Hadleigh, sports editor of the weekly series, news editor, assistant editor, deputy editor, editor of the Evening Star and finally as the group's senior editor with responsibility for the EADT, a post he has held for nearly 11 years (as at January 2007).

Terry adds "I've been EADT editor for nearly 11 years now, an enormous privilege for a local boy, who grew up reading the very same newspaper! Outside work my interests include most sports: I'm a long-suffering Ipswich Town season ticket holder, and I plod the roads to keep fit. I ran the London Marathon in 2005 and am repeating the feat this year, to celebrate my 50th birthday and also to raise money for the St Elizabeth Hospice in Ipswich."

Interestingly his wife, Jane, is the EADT's crown court correspondent.
